IMPRISONMENT

The defendant is hereby committed to the custody of the United States Bureau of Prisons to be imprisoned for a total term of 57 months.

The Court has, as the record will reflect, carefully reviewed the Presentence Investigation Report ("PSR") and its factual findings. There not being any objections to the PSR's factual findings, the Court will adopt those as its own. The Court has also considered the PSR's sentencing guideline applications. Defendant Brian Disher's objection to the PSR's conclusion that a role adjustment is not warranted having been withdrawn, the Court will adopt the PSR's sentencing guideline applications as its own. The Court has considered the factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a). The Court notes Disher was a member of a drug-trafficking organization, and trafficked between 500 and 1,250 grams of methamphetamine between October 2008 and December 2008. Disher's offense level is 31 and his criminal history category is I, establishing a guideline sentencing range of 108 to 135 months. Under rule 11(c)(1)(C) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, however, the Court accepts the plea agreement, which includes a sentence of 57 months, as the Court is satisfied the agreed-upon sentence departs for justifiable reasons. There was circumstantial proof with respect to some of the drug amounts charged in this case, but the charged amount basically came down to an interpretation based on statements in conversations intercepted through wire taps. At trial, the defense's interpretation likely would have differed from Plaintiff United States of America's interpretation. For purposes of disposition, there was somewhat of a range in what the United States estimated were the amounts discussed in the interpreted communications. Given that there was no definitive nature to those conversations, counsel for the United States took an amount which, under the guidelines, would have given a base offense level of 30. From there, counsel for the United States calculated that, with 3 levels for acceptance of responsibility, Disher's offense level would have been approximately 27. Given Disher's late joining in the conspiracy, which is undisputed by both parties, the United States felt that a 2-level role adjustment would be appropriate. With a 2-level reduction, Disher's offense level would be approximately 25. An offense level of 25 and a criminal history category of I would set forth a guideline range of 57 to 71 months. Moreover, shortly after Disher's arrest, there was an investigation into a matter unrelated to this. Disher's girlfriend met with representatives from various agencies and provided information. Counsel for the United States represented that he did not believe that the information ever produced any tangible results and that he believed that the unrelated matter was still unsolved, but represented that the United States felt it was appropriate to convey some reward to Disher based upon that cooperation. The United States believed that it would have been worth about 2 levels, keeping Disher's offense level at 25. The parties were also facing mountainous litigation going forward. At the time of the sentencing hearing, there was still a pending motion for additional discovery related to wiretaps. There was going to be a substantive motion to dismiss or to suppress the information that resulted from the wiretaps in this case.

The Court has carefully considered the guidelines, but in arriving at the sentence, the Court has taken into account not only the guidelines but other sentencing goals. The Court has also considered the arguments and representations of counsel in the sentencing hearing. Specifically, the Court has considered the guideline sentencing range established for the applicable category of offense committed by the applicable category of defendant. After carefully reviewing the factual portions of the PSR and considering Disher's involvement in the organization, while the Court is not convinced that Disher is a minor or minimal participant in the organization, the Court recognizes that Disher is one of the least culpable participants in the organization. Disher may not be substantially less culpable than other participants, but the Court believes that he had less involvement than other participants. The Court thus does not believe that the punishment that is set forth in the guidelines is appropriate for this sort of offense. The Court has considered the kinds of sentences and ranges that the guidelines establish and the Court agrees with counsel that a sentence of 57 months is long enough to reflect the seriousness of the offense, promote respect for the law, provide just punishment, afford adequate deterrence, and protect the public. Because of some of the things that the Court will require as part of conditions of supervised release, the Court believes that the sentence will provide Disher with some of the needed education, training, and care to overcome some of the problems that he has. The Court believes that the sentence of 57 months and the mandatory minimum on supervised release fully and effectively reflects each of the factors that 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) embodies. And while the Court's task as a trial court is not to come up with a reasonable sentence, but to balance the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors correctly, see United States v. Conlan, 500 F.3d 1167, 1169 (10th Cir. 2007) ("[A] district court's job is not to impose a reasonable sentence. Rather, a district court's mandate is to impose a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary, to comply with the purposes of section 3553(a)(2).") (citation omitted), the Court believes that a 57-month sentence is a more reasonable sentence than the guideline range. This sentence is sufficient without being greater than necessary to comply with the purposes of punishment that the Sentencing Reform Act sets forth.
